MAINSTREAM BRANDS

However, he noted that most mainstream brands continued to position smart eyewear as a premium wearable category, suggesting that mass-market adoption may still take time.

Industry observers argued that consumer acceptance will depend not only on technology but also on factors such as comfort, styling, prescription compatibility and privacy safeguards. For Indian eyewear companies, the opportunity lies in making the technology relevant to everyday use rather than positioning it purely as a gadget.

"Eyewear can become one of the most natural inter-
